

The carter tells the knell of parting day.
A line of cars winds slowly o'er the sea,
A pedestrian plods his absent-minded way
And leaves the world quite unexpectedly.

Killing Deer in Oxford County

Nearly 500 Tagged—How Long Will Hunting Last?

Three deer this year to one last year have been killed in Oxford County under the new law operating two weeks into December, according to reports from inspection stations.

The season opened two weeks later than usual and continued to the middle of December on a plea from some hunters that heretofore mild weather often prevented getting carcases out of the woods and much loss was caused by the meat spoiling.

Figures show that hunting has been unusually good under the new law. How long the supply can last with a repetition of high records is a serious question for real sportsmen. Just this year is showing that perhaps the old law was a wise check on cleaning up the deer in quick order.

At least that's the opinion of hunters and dealers deeply interested in preserving our wild game. Possibly a late fall might have added to the high mortality, but those who know believe setting the deer hunting season forward.

Review of Current Events

By R. L. Cummings of West Paris

This morning (Dec. 26, 1931) you have got a list of the first installments of the "Code" bill. Only a host of $1,000,000 per year in the salaries of one batch of officials. Looks to me as if those officials might save more money than they did before. I guess that is where they meant the saving would come. Sure enough, they knew it would come there.

The votes were scarcely counted when they began to look for some large building to house their consolidated departments. Innocent people supposed that it would require less room, but they seem to have realized all the time that they knew they would want more room in which to house this expanded consolidation.

How does it happen that these men that seemed anxious to retain jobs were paying $2,000 to $5,000 a year should have increase of $1,000 a year. Now that I think the matter over I don't call that that this saving administration did call the wages of all men that labored on the highway from $3.50 to $3.00 per day. I guess they must have taken enough out of them to make them cover these increases. The head of their accounting department gets $600 added to his salary, making it $4,500.

And now Mr. Walter Lippman in a full column article that comes in the Christmas number of the Globe, tells us that to end the war we must forgive all the war debts that are due us from foreign countries. Now, honest Mr. Lippman, that wouldn't do it and I'll tell you why and I guess you'll be able to see the point after I tell you. If we do that we would only be giving to the rich people of those countries. The people whose bonds and stocks, through our great financiers, bought, of course they got a nice profit for the job. You think they would let any of it slip through their fingers to the people that are out of a job and cold and hungry, just stop and think what our great American financiers do with what they get. You know they get pretty fine profits all through the war and if you ever had a fair dream perhaps it might have been that they then would allow profits to go back to "normal" so as to leave something for people to keep the business of the country going on. You know they did nothing of the sort. They increased profits by leaps and bounds, boomed their inflated stocks and bonds until they were like very pretty soap bubbles. When the innocent people bought for what they looked like, you know what happened to that soap bubble. In 1929, if you don't happen to recall, I will say that it was just the story of Humpty Dumpty over again.

Now do you really want to know what would cure all Europe before the dawn of Jan. 1st, 1932? I am just telling you this and if you can just spring it on them and get them to do it they will elect you the first President of the United States of Europe. If they don't follow your advice you will be no worse off than Henry Ford was when his Peace ship arrived home.

England, France, Germany and Italy are supposed to have a population of 180,000,000 people and a wealth of $241,000,000,000. Now just take one-half of that wealth and broadcast it to all the people. Figure it out and you will see that that would give $3,237 to every family of five people and still leave the rich with half what he now has with this $18 to the New Year's present of $3,237, for spending money. Wouldn't this old nightmare "Depression" just skidoo? People would be buying so much that every maker of goods would have to advertise for help. Poor starving laborers would want our goods and have the cash to pay for them.

What I want to impress on your mind is the fact that a little exchange of a few billion odd dollars between those that have already got other billions would do any good. They would only see the fact that they can't put them out and get principal and interest back if they try to sell something to people that haven't got any money.

Just remember that "Wealth, like manure, in order to be of any good must be spread."

Children's Column

Miss Curiosity

Dear Corner Cousins: The year is fast drawing to a close and the new one will soon begin. I am sending in twelve stories, one for each month of the year—taken from a book ninety-eight years old.

In clouds of mystery sealed; Events the distant and the near, How the year began, and how it ended, As winter seethers death, So your nature's smiling face; Will social joys enslave.

But when the lovely Spring Comes on with her voice to sing, And nature's verdant hand, Now shows us the sunshine and the rain, The victory to gain; And both the dormant earth revive, And strewn with flowers the plain.

How sweet his sleep at night, Who will explore the Hall, And wakes to hail the morning light, At his own dawn.

Now verdure clothes the lawn, And whirling zephyrs play; The lovely summer day, When parched with burning heat, Beneath the sultry skies, How pleasant to the rest, Where limpid streams arise!

And health, and peace of mind, Combine their energies to bless The virtuous, who do love to live, Now heaven, with liberal hand, Dispenses good indeed; To reward the understanding, Whence your rich gifts proceed.

The time that those who toil, In the choice blessing of the soil, Can ever hope to share, But while we headlong press, O'er Nature's pleasing things, The frost of winter blasts the grove, And snags the music strings.

Once more the scene must close, Where are its joys and woes? Alas! they passed away, I see the year's end nigh; Margaret's Aunt that she has found me out. Now please, Aunt, don't tell on me, because I don't want to be found out. I do love to have folks guessing who you are and I do love to listen to them discussing who I am. I would like a card so I can show it to some time later. Yours truly, Miss Curiosity.

FRYEBURG-TOLL BRIDGE

There were family Christmas trees and parties at G. G. McAllister's, M. L. Allen's and the Holt's. Santa Claus did not fail to call at the homes where there were not any trees waiting for him.

Those pupils who did not miss a day of school for the fall term, closed the 18th, were Edward and Elsie Holt, Lilla Durgin, Francis Parker, Norma Allen and Frankie Coleman.

Ernest Mills of Fryeburg is visiting his sister, Mrs. Ella McAllister and family.

Halbert McAllister and Link Gage out west for Leo Bell two days last week. Scott's Woodruff is trucking logs from Sabattus, Norway, and is now clearing the banks of Old Saco in Kenneth Fraser's field for Marcellus Stearns of Lovell Center and Fryeburg village. Leo Bell surveys the timber as the trucks unload.

Linda McAllister is visiting Janet Fraser.

G. G. McAllister is gaining slowly from his fall of a few weeks ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Roland McAllister returned home, Sunday, from a visit in South Waterford with Mr. and Mrs. Willis Learned, parents of Mrs. McAllister.

Since the introduction of automobiles in this country, we have not heard of a single person going crazy over trying to establish perpetual motion.

Happy Prosperous New Year to All

THE NEW YORK (OXFORD COUNTY, ME.) ADVERTISER, FRIDAY, JANUARY 1, 1932

Bureau News

James F. Sears, gallant Rockland fireman, has been in a long fight for suggestions that might be followed with profit by other communities, each of which has his historic spots and heroes of tradition.

The Maine Publicity Bureau has received an inquiry from a resident of Columbus, Ohio who has been coming to the state for several summers, inquiring about the condition of the roads at holiday time. "I am so in love with Maine in the summer," he writes, "that I feel must see how it looks in the winter."

Dr. George Rockwell, the noted humorist on a vaudeville tour, believes in advertising Maine wherever he goes. In Christmas cards this year, Rockwell has engraved: "Merry Christmas from Woodbury Harbor, where it snows real serious. Taste it!"

An editorial in the Boston Evening Globe says the following concerning recreation in Maine: "Further evidence at hand to show that the 'summer business' is a New England industry, which largely escapes the effects of depression, is the fact that the Maine Publicity Bureau publishes figures comparing volume of traffic this year and last year. It has counted the out-of-state cars bound eastward through Longview in Portland between June 15 and Sept. 1, and finds there were this year 48,711 of them as compared with 35,746 last year. Plates from these cars represented 10 states, and the District of Columbia and, in addition, the Canadian provinces, Newfoundland, the Canal Zone, Porto Rico and Cuba. Oregon was the leading American state. Massachusetts was most often represented in this procession of the motor car past the statue of the state in the Maine city. There were 18,361 plates with Massachusetts plates this year as compared with 16,882 last year. Eighty-one cars from Texas gave evidence that the motor tourist is not afraid of winter weather. There were 1,000 cars from that distant state counted last year. "Such a count goes far to indicate that there has been no diminution in the number of summer visitors. It does not, of course fully tell the story of the state at the 'summer business'. That involves consideration of the amounts spent by visitors, the length of their stay and other factors." Still there is ground for the assertion that the recreation industry accounts in large measure for the fact that Maine is applicable to other New England states. It goes without saying that business which flourishes in hard times and in good, is one of the most valuable assets that a state can have."

TRAVELING FACTORIES

Taking the factory to the farm is the latest scientific adaptation of motor transport to industry.

Following the development of a process for freezing the original fresh qualities of perishable foodstuffs, Clarence Birdseye, quick-freezing inventor, has recently devised portable apparatus for freezing foods at sources of supply.

The new type machinery is moved by motor truck to wherever it is needed, adjacent to berry patches, truck gardens, fruit orchards, and on fish piers.
